Authority On Old Violins Advised U. S. Customs, And Firms

Louis Kramer, aged eighty-nine years, owner of Ye Olde Fiddle Shoppe, at 72 W. 48th Street, in New York, and a leading authority on old violins and other musical instruments, who died recently in his apartment above his shop after a short illness, opened his first fiddle shop in Yorkville about 1904, after going there from his native Mokalno, a city in the old Austro-Hungarian Empire which is now a part of Czechoslovakia.

He was nineteen at the time. He earned his living as a violinist, and later became a member of a number of then famous orchestras, including the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, says the New York Herald Tribune. He was conductor of the Viennese Elite Orchestra when he decided to become a dealer in rare violins.

For several years he had been collecting violins as a hobby, and there were more old violins in his home than wall space. His collection included instruments by such masters as Stradivarius, Nicola, Hyronimus Amati, Stainer, Guarnerius and Cremona. Their values ranged from $5,000 to $25,000. When he discovered he could not insure them, he decided to sell some and the success of the first sales led him to resign as an orchestra leader and open a musical shop.

"What makes an old violin valuable is its tone," he once said, "grain of wood, fitting, varnish, scrolls, and general contour. All truly valuable violins are made by hand with the utmost care and skill."

Mr. Kramer was frequently consulted by the United States Customs Service in its evaluation of imported antique musical instruments. In recent years, he had rendered the same service to a number of leading insurance companies.

Mr. Kramer frequently recalled that he had traveled by steamer, by rail, on the backs of camels and in mud to his boot tops searching for precious instruments in secluded villages and hamlets.

Once he discovered a genuine Johann Christoph Leydolff violin in a Czechoslovakian village. The instrument had been presented to Franz Schubert by his patron, Count Esterdsky, says the New York Herald Tribune. This precious violin was in the possession of a seventy-year-old Catholic priest, whose family had owned it for seventy years.

Surviving are two sons, Felix and Otto Kramer; a niece, Mrs. Rose Hacker, whom Mr. Kramer rescued from a concentration camp at the end of World War II, and a nephew, Henry White, who was rescued from Nazi Germany in 1935.

Israel Is In Race For Means To Turn Salt Water Sweet

A shortage of water is bound to become an acute world problem in a matter of twenty years, unless scientists find practicable ways to desalinate sea and brackish water. This forecast, supported by world authorities on the subject, has been expressed in Tel Aviv by Israel's Sea Water Conversion Commission.

A recent report by the Commission explains that improved sanitary conditions are gradually leading to an increasing consumption of water per capita, says the New York Times. The report further states that industry and farming are progressively making greater demands on existing water resources and that the world's growing population is steadily increasing the number of water consumers.

In the United States, for instance, requirements of water are expected to treble in twenty years to reach some 600,000,000,000 gallons, the report said, quoting the estimate of an American authority. In many parts of the world experts are engaged in a race against time to find practicable means to turn salt water into sweet. About fifteen methods are under study, and some, like the distillation process, promise success.

In Israel the problem is regarded as of prime importance. Here the shortage of water may be felt by the end of the next decade, when all natural water resources will be fully exploited. Here, too, scientists are engaged on their own lines of inquiry. Three directions are being followed:

A method of special interest is the use of exhaust steam from large steam power plants according to the distillation process, which is being perfected in the United States. But since it has not yet been operating on a large scale anywhere in the world, Israeli experts are wary of recommending it without further study.

The electrodyalisis process is based on the property of salts when dissolved in water to separate into ions that have positive or negative charges. By the use of membranes having the property of ion-selectivity to form many compartments the number of positive and negative ions are reduced. This decreases the salinity of the water in half the compartments.

According to the Israeli commission's report, this method is proving suitable for brackish water with salinity not exceeding 6,000 to 7,000 parts per million, but unsuitable for the conversion of sea water, which usually contains salts amounting to over 35,000 parts per million, says the New York Times. Another process under investigation in Israel is the freezing method, based on the fact that when sea water is frozen the salts separate from the water and remain enclosed between the crystals of the ice. The problem is how to remove the salts from the crystals.

N. Y. Rabbi Urges Aid To S. American Jews At Once

The executive vice president of the New York Board of Rabbis recently appealed to American Jews to give immediate religious and educational aid to 700,000 South American Jews. Rabbi Harold N. Gordon told the New York Times that the "South American Jewish community is seriously concerned with the means of perpetuating Jewish life in its midst."

Rabbi Gordon had returned from a six-week study tour of Colombia, Ecuador, Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Surinam, Venezuela, the Netherlands Antilles and the British West Indies. His organization includes 750 Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform rabbis.

Rabbi Gordon deplored an acute shortage of rabbinical leaders, educators, teachers, trained social workers, youth leaders "and other personnel so vital to the growth of a strong community." For example, he said, Rio de Janeiro, with almost 50,000 Jews, has only one practicing congregational rabbi, and there are no rabbinical seminaries or teachers' institute on the entire South American continent.

Rabbi Gordon said that rabbinic and teachers' training seminaries must be set up in major South American cities, "utilizing many of the local resources and the languages of the country."

However, he said that until such institutions were established rabbinic and teachers' institutions in America should arrange for "a system of internship," obliging graduate rabbis to serve at least one year in a South American community.

"Regardless of the shortage of rabbis and teachers that exist in the United States," he said to the New York Times, "there is no community here, no matter how small or how distant, that is not crisis-crossed frequently by representatives of the major national and international organizations, bringing with them inspiration as well as information."

Rabbi Gordon said that the South American Jewish community "is not lacking in Jewish spirit," adding that "every city has some sort of Jewish community council in which the varied and distinct groups speak with a united voice."

U. S. Private Funds Build Low Price Israeli Homes

Private American investment has caused a quiet revolution on Israel's housing front, according to Isaac Imber, vice-president of Rassco Israel Corp., New York, reports the New York Herald Tribune. American-financed efficiency studio apartments have pointed the way out of a critical housing shortage beset by rent controls, "key" money, and other problems, Mr. Imber claimed recently.

To meet the huge demand for low-rental apartments for young couples, new immigrants and others who cannot afford to buy a home or a co-operative apartment, Rassco-Rural and Suburban Settlement Co., Israel's leading development and building company, pioneered the construction of studio apartments in multiple units with funds provided by private United States investors.

The experiment, started two years ago, proved the feasibility of the project, and is paying returns of better than 8 per cent a year to the individual investors. Today hundreds of such units are being built by Rassco in different parts of the country. Additional hundreds are under construction by the Ministry of Labor which has adopted a program of rent-subsidies for newlyweds in a triple effort to overcome the housing shortage, combat abuses of "key" money, and gradually lead away from rent controls.

Rassco's studio apartments feature a large multi-purpose room providing living and sleeping quarters, bathroom, kitchen, built-in closets, and in some cases terraces, renting for about $40 a month, says the New York Herald Tribune. Depending on the location, twenty to thirty such units are contained in each apartment building which is three or four stories high.

Groups of investors and individuals from several cities in the United States, Canada, Mexico and other Western Hemisphere countries are sponsoring the construction of studio apartments now being built by Rassco in Jerusalem, Beersheba, and Tel Aviv.

Great Reception Of Bernstein And Orchestra In Berlin Made Trip Worth While

Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra found their reward in a West Berlin concert hall for having flown across the Atlantic to give two concerts in that harassed, divided city. As Mr. Bernstein ended the last notes of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, the 2,000 Berliners came to their feet in wild applause, reports the New York Times. They clapped until their hands were sore. They stamped their feet. They shouted. And they kept it up for ten minutes.

For them this was not just a concert brilliantly played by a great orchestra under a great conductor. That was part of it, but the Berliners have a gifted orchestra of their own and they are not starved for music.

The applause was a measure of their gratitude that Mr. Bernstein and the orchestra had added the trans-Atlantic trip to the rigors of a grueling tour through the United States. For the Berliners, it was another expression of what they consider American acts of political faith in supporting them against Soviet pressures to take over their city.

Something of the audience's mood must have communicated itself to the orchestra. Prof. H. H. Stuckenschmidt, West Berlin's leading critic, said afterward that he had never heard it played so well, that never was its intensity and sweep of tone so marked.

He predicted that the orchestra's appearance would be the high point of the annual West Berlin Music, Drama and Arts Festival that had got under way.

For everyone there concerned with the orchestra's appearance at the festival, its reception made the difficulties and troubles that it involved worthwhile. The orchestra was not scheduled to come. There was no money to bring it even if it had had open dates.

But last spring Charles Moore, a vice-president of the Ford Motor Company, determined, on a trip to Germany, to see whether it could be done as an appreciation of America's unfaltering interest in the city, says the New York Times. The Ford Company agreed to put up $160,000 to finance the trip. Mr. Bernstein and the orchestra agreed and the complicated business of canceling previous commitments and re-scheduling them was worked out.

Besides the Tchaikovsky symphony, Mr. Bernstein led the orchestra in his own overture for "Candide," Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3; and Aaron Copland's "El Salon México", and as an encore, the "Inferno Dance" from Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite.

The next day the West Berlin high school and university students before whom he and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra played loved it and let him know by enthusiastic ovations.

Mr. Bernstein used Beethoven's First Piano Concerto in C major

TORONTO MARRIAGES

NEWMOUNT-AUERBACH

The marriage of Miss Nancy Phyllis Auerbach, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raoul Auerbach, 50 Strathearn Road, to George Newmount, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ujheghi, 868 Eglinton Avenue West, was solemnized by Rabbi Abraham L. Feinberg, on October 11, at five o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents. The bride was given in marriage by her father. The bride was attired in a white, taffeta and satin gown. It was fashioned with a fitted bodice; long, sheath sleeves; Alencon lace applique, at the scooped neckline; and in scalloped effect on the full skirt which ended in a chapel train. Her elbow-length illusion veil was gathered to an Alencon lace cap; and she carried a cascade bouquet of stephanotis and orchids. Miss Patti Mandell was maid of honour. She wore a gown of mauve silk organza over taffeta. It was styled with a fitted bodice; scooped neckline; and a bell-shaped tunic over a slim skirt. Her head-piece was a large matching flower, and veil; and she carried yellow Sweetheart roses. Julie Auerbach, sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid, in a mauve organza gown over taffeta, made with fitted bodice; cap sleeves; crushed cummerbund; and a bouffant skirt with large bow in the back. She had a cap of tinted blossoms; and carried a bouquet of yellow Sweetheart roses. John Braun was best man. Peter Mandell, Michael Taylor, and Eric Ginsberg, seated the guests. The canopy was decorated with standards of yellow chrysanthemums and pink roses. Mrs. Auerbach, mother of the bride, wore a gray, satin, three-tiered, tunic sheath; with a scooped neckline embroidered with grey and bronze sequins; with a small bronze tulle hat. Mrs. Ujheghi, mother of the groom, wore a blue satin sheath, with a draped bodice; and a matching two-toned turban. Each had a yellow orchid corsage. Mrs. Therese Englander, grandmother of the bride, wore a navy-blue lace gown; and her corsage was a mauve orchid. Max Ginsberg, grandfather of the bride, was also present. Mr. and Mrs. George Newmount left on a motor trip in the States. The bride went away in a raspberry-coloured suit, with full length coat; and had a corsage of baby orchids. They will reside at 2525 Bathurst Street. Here for the occasion was Mrs. Max Bloch, of New York.

The Final Conflict

BY SHLOMO KATZ

Now, in 1969, the First Atomic War has long been a matter of history. It took place well over thirty years ago. The libraries are full of books recounting the events of that war, analyzing the battles, appraising the qualities of its outstanding commanders, and giving detailed descriptions of the atrocities committed by the enemy. Everybody believes these accounts, and it would be as much as my life, let alone my reputation, is worth to contradict them.

Though I know most of these beliefs are false, I have, of late, begun to doubt their falsehood. "Is it possible," I ask myself, "that I am the only one who knows the real truth? Is it conceivable that the entire world should be wrong and only I, Christopher Grantville, professor of history in one of the minor colleges of the country, should remember things as they actually happened? What is truth, anyway?" I often ask myself.

"Isn't truth a relative concept, and that which is generally accepted is true? And is it not equally possible that it is I, who claim to remember the true sequence of events in the First Atomic War, who am labouring under a delusion, while all the rest, which means not only my colleagues, but everybody else in the world, are right?"

As I said above, these doubts have lately begun to trouble me seriously. If I do not take advantage of the clarity of my memory now, I may soon become unable to distinguish between truth and falsehood. I therefore decided to record the following account of events as they occurred before my own vision becomes dimmed. I will leave this manuscript in a safe place with instructions that it should not be opened before the year 2100 — perhaps by that time it will again be safe to reveal the truth. Were I to offer this account to the public now, it would at once be destroyed and I would most likely disappear mysteriously without trace, or at best be shouted down as a madman and confined to a lunatic asylum.

I will make this statement brief and deal only with essentials, for once these are known, humanity will easily be able to reconstruct the rest of the events as they happened and to interpret them correctly. And now I will begin.

All through the latter half of the nineteen-fifties, humanity strove to avoid an atomic conflict, fearful that it might lead to the destruction, or at best to the total barbarization of the entire human race. Many international conferences were held, and often it seemed as if an effective way had been found to outlaw atomic warfare. But after each upsurge of optimism, tensions between the Communist and Free countries mounted again and a new round of conferences was required merely to regain some of the ground that had been lost in the meantime.

By the time the nineteen sixties came, humanity had become deeply convinced that there was no escaping an atomic war. Efforts were still made to postpone it but everybody felt that sooner or later it was bound to break out. This conviction became so overwhelming that a strange apathy prevailed and people did not care much any longer about the consequences of such a war. They were almost anxious for it to come and have it over with.

When the war finally did come, it therefore didn't surprise anyone. As had been predicted by all military experts, the first phase of the war was brief and devastating. Within two weeks, the thirty largest cities in the United States, and all major military installations, were wiped out. Similar havoc was wrought on the Communist side. The major allies of both the United States and Russia suffered in proportion. At the end of two weeks, industry everywhere had been so thoroughly destroyed or crippled that further atomic attack on the part of either side was out of the question.

Perhaps I should add at this point that, at the time, it was impossible to establish who began the war, for at the very moment when the first atomic mushroom rose over New York, a small broadcasting station near Moscow was picked up announcing that Moscow was being A-bombed. Later, of course, each side accused the other of starting the war, but for the sake of the record I feel it is necessary to make this point.

I do not feel it is necessary to describe in this brief document the havoc caused in this country: the smouldering cities, the caravans of people clogging all roads leading from the major population centers toward the countryside, the cries of the injured, the huge encampments that formed everywhere, the pollution of the water supplies along the roads, and the epidemics of dysentery and other diseases that followed in its train. All these things can well be imagined, and most of them are chronicled in the histories of that time with a fair degree of accuracy. Mob fought mob for food; the farmers armed themselves and resisted the hordes from the cities that swept over their fields and devoured or carried off every bit of food, leaving the land behind them bare as if they had been locusts instead of people.

There were also some natural phenomena of an unusual nature that were then noticed only casually. People were too busy trying to survive during the first months of the war to pay close attention to anything else, but those who did observe noticed strange thin bluish clouds floating at great altitudes during the day and similar clouds of a pink hue at night, even when there was no moon and no apparent source for their illumination. The matter was casually dismissed as "radiation of some sort."

Gradually life assumed a semblance of organization. The war went on, of course, but with outmoded means. The army was reorganized to make it effective for combat without the specialized weapons formerly supplied by industry. The huge encampments were broken up and slowly distributed throughout the country. Life did not become as primitive as the prophets of doom had forecast; it reverted perhaps a century backward.

Some trains ran on the few undamaged or quickly repaired railroads, but airplanes disappeared when the supplies of gasoline and spare parts were exhausted. Motor traffic was not entirely eliminated but was greatly reduced, and one could occasionally see strange vehicles that were quickly devised by the army to use wood, dry grass, alcohol and other simple and readily obtainable fuels.

It was a strange existence, a way of life that resembled the middle of the nineteenth century, pocked here and there with the trappings of the second half of the twentieth. Thus, electric light and power became rare since all the large powerhouses had been destroyed and all the major dams were blasted in the first onslaught of the enemy.

But here and there a small power station remained, or a new one was quickly set up along some small source of water power — that is, wherever necessary machinery could be salvaged from somewhere and laboriously brought to the spot. In the midst of this total regression, radio broadcasts remained a common feature. There were no entertainment programs, to be sure, and the Government used radio exclusively to urge the people on to greater war efforts and to stimulate their spirits.

I should perhaps point out that the broadcasts lost much of the old finesse. They were blunt and cruel, under the impact of the great suffering that was experienced during the first weeks of the war, no doubt, and called for the complete destruction not only of the enemy's fighting forces, but of his entire way of life. The First Atomic War became a Holy War in which the losing side was to be converted to the principles of the victor or annihilated.

For some months the propaganda war showed no unusual symptoms, aside, as I have stated, from its uncompromising violence. The Communist broadcasts, which were easily picked up on any short wave set, were equally ruthless.

And then a strange thing occurred, strange especially because it was scarcely noticed at first and was entirely disregarded almost immediately thereafter. A broadcast from Kansas, where the Government had taken refuge as soon as the war broke out, sounded a strange note. I heard it the first time under circumstances that were not unusual then. I and a group of colleagues, former teachers of history in various colleges, were lunching in a potato field.

I should explain perhaps that we had been drafted to go over the extensive potato fields in our district carefully and pick up whatever potatoes had been overlooked during the harvest. Winter was then impending, and the poor state of the nation's food reserves made this arrangement logical, especially since education, higher education in particular, was totally disorganized and professors and

Some persons feel protected without immunization merely because they are adults, and therefore past contracting childhood diseases. This is dangerous thinking indeed, for in the case of poliomyelitis, those between the ages of 20 to 45, and pregnant mothers in particular, are proving more and more susceptible to this disease. But everybody should be immunized.

college teachers had little or no useful employment.

As I said, we were lunching in the open potato field one day with only a tent for shelter in case of rain. But we did have a small battery-powered radio set with us. Newspapers had become a rarity and it was natural for us to take this set with us. After all, we were people accustomed to keeping informed about world events.

Thus it came about that as we cooked our lunch — which consisted of potatoes baked in an open pit — we turned on the radio. There was no news of significance: some ground had been lost on one front, and some enemy positions taken on another front in heavy hand-to-hand fighting. We knew that the war had settled down to a temporary stalemate, and as historians we were not specially concerned with the outcome of minor battles.

We were finishing our lunch when the announcer began his concluding remarks. These were customarily of an uplifting and patriotic character and were read to the soft accompaniment of the national anthem. But this time they caught our attention and we looked at each other in amazement. The national anthem was played as background music but the speech was astounding, to say the least.

The announcer said: "We know that the people of the United States, loyal to the principles of liberty as these were so brilliantly expounded by our great Marxist teachers, Coolidge, Hoover and Garner, will spare themselves neither effort nor sacrifice in the struggle against the enemies of mankind who have set out to destroy the greatest achievement of the human race, the victorious building of socialism within these forty-eight states.

"All men and women, nay, even children and the aged who have honorably won the right to enjoy peacefully the blessings of socialism for which they so courageously fought and labored all their lives, will gladly leap to the fray to defend this fatherland of the workingman, this toilers' paradise that already extends from the rocky coast of socialist Maine to the sun-drenched fields of socialist California, from the brutal onslaught of the enemies of peace, the Kremlin imperialists who would destroy us to satisfy the greed of a handful of Russian capitalists"

The announcer continued in this vein for some time, but we no longer listened. We looked at each other in consternation. What could have happened? Had the Communists, by some ruse, succeeded in invading this country at its very heart, in Kansas, whence the broadcast came? Or was it a case of fifth-columnists in the Government apparatus? The last seemed the most reasonable explanation and our consternation soon gave way to placid reassurance. It was a small matter. The enemy, to be sure, still had his agents everywhere.

But our own FBI was constantly on their track, and if one fifth-columnist managed to insinuate a subversive speech into a broadcast he would be silenced soon enough. Thus reassured we started back to our work. And then the same idea seemed to strike us all at once for we suddenly stopped and looked at each other. It could not be an enemy agent momentarily insinuating his voice into an American broadcast. Why should the enemy speak of a socialist Maine and California? Why should he refer to Kremlin imperialists?

We did not articulate these questions; it was not necessary. A great dread suddenly seized upon us. Involuntarily I raised my eyes and looked upward, to the weird bluish clouds that had been scudding high in the sky ever since the deluge of atomic explosives hit the country early in the war.

My colleagues followed my involuntary movement and then exclaimed in unison: "No, No," and fled each to his own potato row. I followed them.

The strange broadcast troubled us deeply all that day but we were afraid to talk about it. It could not be laughed off, neither was there any reasonable explanation for it and, worst of all, we felt as if, confronted with it, we could not trust our own reason. There was something irrational about the broadcast as well as about our reaction to it. I for one decided to await future developments before reaching any conclusions.

Our work in the potato field lasted till it became too dark to continue and we then returned to our respective homes. We were all very tired from the unaccustomed physical labor, and when I returned to my cubicle which had been assigned to me in an army-type barracks where some hundreds of people lived, I spoke to no one and soon fell asleep.

The next day we returned to our labors in the potato field. I ached to bring up the subject of the preceding day's broadcast, but my colleagues on either side of me were strangely reluctant to discuss the matter. At lunchtime I eagerly awaited the one o'clock broadcast. It brought a shattering surprise for me. As the announcer recounted the daily score of small victories and minor defeats on the various fronts, he exceeded his own performance of the previous day.

Now he sounded like a stock-in-trade editorial from some Soviet paper. All the freshness and vigor had gone out of his speech and his words rattled dully like a memorized oration as he spoke of "the shock troops of the American socialist fatherland" who "inspired by the great example of our chief, the father of the oppressed everywhere, the liberator of the working masses of the world, President Charles Karl Marx Smith," and spurred on "by the great determination to smash the mad dogs of Moscow imperialism" bravely assaulted the enemy positions and, "without suffering a single casualty themselves, caused the destruction of three hundred of the enemy."

I looked at my colleagues and my spine tingled with terror. Their faces showed no trace of surprise. They placidly ate their baked potatoes. One of them nodded his head approvingly and muttered something about "the Russian capitalist swine."

I must have turned pale for one of them quickly walked over to me and asked solicitously, "What is the matter, Chris? Don't you feel well?"

"I feel fine," I shouted. "But the broadcast, that broadcast, and you, what is the matter with you?"

"The broadcast?" he asked in surprise. "What is the matter with it?"

"What is the matter with it?" I screamed. "Are you all insane or something? You ask me what is the matter with it?"

He exchanged meaningful glances with the others and repeated his question: "Yes, Chris, what is the matter with it?"

"Are we Communists or are we Americans?" I lost my head altogether and shouted at the top of my lungs. "Are we fighting the Communist onslaught to destroy the free world, or aren't we? And since when has our President, Charles Smith, become Charles 'Karl Marx' Smith?"

My colleagues gathered around me. Some looked at me sympathetically, others had a trace of suspicion in their eyes. "You tell us what you think of it all," one of them suggested slyly though gently. The others waited for me to speak.

I was about to say something but restrained myself. For no reason that I could give, I suddenly realized that they believed every word of the broadcast, and that they considered me somehow suspect for questioning it.

"Go on, please tell us what is troubling you about the broadcast," they urged me.

I felt confused and also fearful. I mistrusted them now. I realized that something terrible had happened to them, and also that they had become immune to reason. Were I to talk to them rationally they would only think that it was I who had gone insane. But I had been challenged and could not escape giving some kind of answer. I therefore tried to straddle the question and to take no clear-cut position.

"I must have suffered a momentary lapse of memory," I said, formulating my remarks so that they could be construed either as agreement with them or as sarcasm, "for, surprisingly, I had forgotten that our President's middle names were Karl Marx. Now isn't that strange?"

"And what did you think was our President's middle name?" they questioned me suspiciously.

"Believe it or not," I hedged, "I had completely forgotten that our great President had a middle name at all."

"And now that you have refreshed your memory," they pursued me relentlessly, "what do you think of 'Karl Marx' as a middle name for our President? Do you think it is a suitable name?"

I was momentarily nonplussed and could think of no way to reply without committing myself. "As a historian I am of course aware of the tremendous effect which Karl Marx had on the course of history," I began hesitantly, "but . . ."

"But what, Chris?" They would not desist.

I decided to make a final test, happen what may. "But it seems strange to me that until this day none of us had ever heard that President Smith had a middle name and that it was Karl Marx, and need I tell you that it is not a suitable name for the leader of a free country dedicated to the principles of freedom and to a relentless struggle against Communist totalitarianism!"

They provided their answer without words. Gently two of my colleagues led me by the arms into the tent we had in the field. "You'd better lie down and rest," they said kindly as they helped me onto the cot we had there. I submitted readily. Physical resistance was pointless, and intellectual resistance seemed hopeless. My friends, intellectual people trained to think clearly and objectively, had undergone a strange transformation. It was evident: they had become Communists. But that wasn't all.

Judging from the broadcast, the entire country and the Government had also become Communist and were convinced that these United States were a Soviet country and that Russia, Stalinist Russia, was a capitalist nation. It was pointless to argue with my friends. Thoughts madly raced through my head: How could that have come about? It was almost supernatural, and as a historian I did not believe in the supernatural.

My friends were in a huddle outside the tent door. They were talking about me; I could see that from the way they frequently looked in my direction. Involuntarily my eyes looked to the patch of sky visible through the tent door, and to the bluish remote clouds. This was the only explanation, far-fetched and unlikely though it seemed. These radiation clouds had the power to transform the mentality of a nation. They not only caused physical havoc at the moment of their release; they also infected the nation with the ideology of those who made the bombs that released them. Here was devil's work indeed.

For an unaccountable reason I was convinced that this was the true explanation, but having been trained for so many years to check my conclusions, I decided to do so also in this instance. Besides, there remained some major questions unanswered.

If the radiation clouds from the Soviet H bombs that destroyed so much of the United States had the strange power of brainwashing an entire country and converting it into a Communist land, how did it happen that I escaped their effect? And wasn't I rash to conclude that everybody in the United States had suffered the same effects, on the basis of the evidence which I saw in my colleagues and in the Government broadcasts? And even so far as my colleagues were concerned, was the evidence conclusive? Should I not wait for further confirmation of their new mentality?

The answer to the last question was given me even as I lay on the cot thinking these strange thoughts, for a few minutes later I heard them debate heatedly. "This is all due to the lack of sufficient socialist indoctrination and laxity of Communist discipline," one of my colleagues was saying. "Academician Jones is right," another seconded him firmly. "The capitalist enemy is always lurking in the background, seeking an opportunity to do his dirty wrecking. We must strengthen our Bolshevik self-criticism. We have been remiss in the struggle against the imperialist enemy. We must at once elect a political commissar to look after the Bolshevik purity of our cell of potato pickers."

The others agreed to the suggestion. I did not listen to them any more. They had provided the final answer to one of my questions. Now I had only two more tests to make.

That night, when all my neighbors were deep in sleep, I cautiously turned on our barracks radio to the Russian short wave frequency. It was two o'clock in the morning. In European Russia it was therefore nine o'clock in the morning and I should have no difficulty picking up some broadcast. I kept the volume low not to awaken any of the people in the barracks. I did not have to wait long. Soon I found an English language broadcast beamed to the United States from Skotoprigonievsk on the upper reaches of the Volga. It confirmed my worst suspicions.

The announcer, who spoke with a strong accent, sonorously declaimed: "The people of Russia, living happily under the blessings of democracy, freedom and individual rights, will never forget nor ever forgive the treacherous Communist American enemy who, having failed to subvert our age-old Russian liberties by wile, has resorted to the use of brutal force in an attempt to impose his vile dictatorship upon us.

"Free men never surrender, and the people of Russia, blessed with freedom, will fight on to the final hour of triumph, when our brave soldiers of liberty, our modern Minute Men, will light the great torch of liberty on the continent of America to shed its light from the sandy beaches of North Carolina to the darkest forests of Oregon, and free the oppressed millions who now groan under the iron heel of the worst dictator mankind has known, Charles Karl Marx Smith."

Quietly I turned off the radio and returned to my bunk. My worst fears had been confirmed. The radiation of American bombs had had the same effect on the Russians as theirs had on us. It was not really necessary to make any further tests. The facts of the situation were altogether too obvious and gruesomely ludicrous.

But further confirmation came, though I did not seek it. The following morning all the inmates of my barracks were told to report to a general meeting at seven o'clock before going out to work. One of my colleagues, the one who had been addressed the previous day as "Academician Jones," talked to the gathering. He did not mince words.

"Comrades," he began, "the enemy is ruthless and the tentacles of his destructive work extend everywhere. We must ever be on guard. Old and young must be on the alert against his intrigues, for now that the imperialist aggressors in Moscow have learned that they cannot subjugate us by force they will do everything in their power to undermine our socialist faith from within with all kinds of reactionary notions. Indeed, I have grounds to believe that the enemy's influence has already succeeded in penetrating our very midst."

At this point he looked in my direction and I blanched, but he did not further identify me and continued with his oration.

"It has therefore been decided by the Soviet of this barracks, of which I am now chairman, that henceforth all remarks of a hostile nature are to be reported to it without delay, even if it should be necessary to interrupt important work to do so. Anyone — and I mean everyone without exception and without regard to age — who fails to report all manifestations of Russian imperialist influences will be tried before the Extraordinary Commission which we appointed last night. And now everyone will report to his work. Beginning today we are introducing the system of socialist competition and food rations will be issued in accordance with the amount of work performed and with the number of enemies of the people reported to the Soviet."

After the meeting I reported myself ill and spent the rest of the day in my bunk thinking. I had all the evidence I wanted, and still I refused to believe what I had seen and heard. My mind refused to assimilate the new state of affairs which flew in the face of reality.

The difference between a simple and a compound fracture is that the former is a broken bone, where there is no wound or break in the skin. A compound fracture has a wound either near or above the fracture, and the bone may protrude. Either type should be immobilized by splints; the protruding bone should not be pulled back by a first aider, but a sterile dressing should be placed over the wound.

He said the Council was concerned with the right of the individual to live and worship according to his faith. He told how his great-grandfather, Baron Lionel de Rothschild, fought for eleven years for the right of Jews to sit in the British House of Commons. Baron de Rothschild was returned to Parliament four times before he was allowed to take his seat in the House when the Disability Bill passed in 1858. W.J.C. Head Hopes Hungarian Jewry Will Be Back

Charges by the Central Board of Hungarian Jewry that the World Jewish Congress had "defamed the Soviet Union" have been denied by the organization's president, Dr. Nahum Goldmann. "All we did was to ask the Soviet Union to give the Jewish community the same facilities to live as Jews as other national and religious groups have in the USSR, and as the Jewish community in Hungary enjoys," Dr. Goldmann declared. He expressed the hope that Hungarian and other East European Jewish communities would soon be able to renew their cooperation with the World Jewish Congress.

The Central Board of Hungarian Jewry recently announced its decision to disaffiliate from the global body, charging that the WJC had manifested "an extremely reactionary political attitude" and had "defamed the Soviet Union." "The World Jewish Congress has never supported reactionary, aggressive or Fascist groups, nor has it ever defamed the Soviet Union," Dr. Goldmann stated in his letter. Dr. Goldmann expressed the organization's "deep regret" at the Hungarian decision to disaffiliate, adding the belief that this action "will be regretted by all the communities and organizations affiliated to the World Jewish Congress, who were happy when you joined a few years ago."

Expressing Congress "best wishes" for the future development of Hungarian Jewry, Dr. Goldmann said he hoped that "the day is not far off when you and other Jewish communities in Eastern Europe will be in a position again to renew cooperation with all Jewish communities in the world through the World Jewish Congress."

Europe's Jews Rebuild

BY CHARLES H. JORDAN, DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF THE JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE IN NEW YORK

In the city of Toulouse in southern France there was not a single room or building available to hold all members of the Jewish community who wished to attend services at the same time. There is only one rabbi in Toulouse. So for years the city's Jews have been meeting for religious services in small rooms scattered throughout the town; and the rabbi has had to run from one room to another to help conduct the services.

But on Rosh Hashonah 5721 all the Jews of Toulouse met for prayers in their own center, and the rabbi was able to conduct the entire service, for everyone, from beginning to end. For this year there is a place in which all can worship, a center built with the help of funds provided by the Joint Distribution Committee and the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany.

Ever since World War II, the Joint Distribution Committee has been working in partnership with the Jewish communities toward rebuilding Jewish life in Europe, so badly shattered by years of Nazism and war. In the first ten years following that war the job was almost entirely that of relieving personal misery and distress. But the job of re-establishing healthy and self-sufficient Jewish communities in Europe was beyond JDC's financial means. The Jews of Europe, slowly struggling out of the abyss, could make relatively small contributions on their own.

For the past five years or so, however, there have been available the funds of the Claims Conference. With these, and with the funds which JDC receives from the United Jewish Appeal for serving the needy Jews of Europe, major strides have been made in the rebuilding of Jewish community life.

From the outset it was made clear that each community seeking help in this field must provide maximum financial support of its own, and the Jews of Europe have cooperated enthusiastically in this project. The physical face of Jewish life on the continent is being transformed, the map is dotted with the new schools, synagogues, hospitals, centers, child care institutions and camps which are being established. A full report would tell of how JDC helped to open a synagogue in Spain, a summer camp in France, a home for the aged in Italy, a synagogue center in Sweden, or a community center in Norway.

Take France. France has the largest Jewish population on the continent of Europe (outside the Soviet Union), as well as the largest number of stateless, homeless Jews. In France alone during the past five years JDC has helped to open twelve centers and this coming year there will be three more, in addition to the one at Toulouse. Construction will begin on new wings for the existing old age homes in Nice and Aix-les-Bains.

In the chaos of post-war France, the Jews of the country had no time to make over-all plans for welfare programs. There were so many aged, there were so many orphans, there were so many needy who had to be taken care of at once, that institutions were started anywhere and everywhere, by men and women of good hearts and good will, to meet the needs that they saw around them.

Fully aware of this situation, the Fonds Social Juif Unifié, the central Jewish welfare body of France, called on JDC two years ago to make a study of Jewish child care services in France. The report is nearly completed. Soon FSJU will have available a five-year plan for the progressive improvement of child care services in France. Outstanding projects scheduled for the coming year for Jewish communities in Europe include:

Belgium, opening of the new wing of the old age home in Brussels.

Greece, opening of a new school in Athens and completion of the housing project for the earthquake victims of Larissa. Holland, official opening of the new mental hospital at Amersfoort. Hopefully, this, the first such institution, will be the opening step in a mental health program for all the Jewish communities of Europe.

Italy, shortly, there will take place the laying of the cornerstone for a 100-bed home for the aged in Milan. By the early part of 1961 the first wing of the new school in Milan will open for 360 students; and additions will be made to the school and kindergarten in Rome providing for eight new classrooms. Such projects are essential for Jewish life in Italy, where Catholic instruction is compulsory in the public schools.

Poland, work to be started on a new home for the aged in Warsaw.

Sweden, building of a new community center in Gothenburg. (Sweden, by the way, is a country where the refugees outnumber the older Jewish population. Approximately 60 percent of the Jews now in Sweden have arrived since the advent of Nazism.) Yugoslavia, completion of a home for the aged in Zagreb.

This is only a sampling, it does not begin to give the entire picture of Jewish community rehabilitation in Europe, nor does it touch on projects about to be started by JDC in the Moslem countries and in Israel. Enough has been given, however, to show that the year 5721 promises new gains, new advances in rebuilding and revitalizing the life of Jews uprooted by disaster. For the part which American Jews have played in bringing this about, JDC, and the Jewish communities of Europe, are grateful. Because this help, given in large measure through the UJA, is the surest guarantee that these communities will survive.

Jewish Labor Committee Cites Soviet Oppression Of Jews

The Jewish Labor Committee, of New York, which represents some half million American Jewish workers in the AFL-CIO, and the 70,000 families of the Workmen's Circle, world's largest Jewish labor fraternal order, repudiated "the distorted image" Premier Khrushchev created of racial discrimination in the United States during a debate at the United Nations General Assembly. The Jewish Labor Committee statement says:

The distortions uttered by Khrushchev at the UN with regard to human rights in the United States was a deliberate attempt to mask the denial of those rights in the Soviet Union.

The Jewish Labor Committee and kindred organizations in the Negro, Puerto Rican, and other minority communities in the U.S. have labored together to establish a strong legal and moral code to assure the rights of every citizen regardless of race, religion, creed, or national origin. Americans together fight against any form of racial or religious bigotry, while it is the Soviet legal policy to lynch nations and nationalities.

Whenever injustices have occurred, Americans of all races, religions, political persuasions, national origins, have united as one voice to condemn such practices and to seek legal redress to correct them. The mirror Khrushchev has asked America to see itself in was manufactured in Moscow and therefore reflects his own image, not ours.

The Khrushchev statement was made to mask repressions against Soviet Jews. Deprived of the right to publish their own newspapers, to establish their own schools, to have their own cultural and spiritual institutions, Soviet Jews are the targets of discriminatory practices in institutions of higher learning.

Premier Khrushchev has attempted to describe New York City as a den of racial discrimination in the housing and public accommodations of UN personnel. There are strong laws in New York which provide that no one shall be discriminated against in such areas because of race, religion, color, or national origin regardless of whether they are UN personnel or not. Let him investigate, however, the fact that 150 students from under-developed nations studying in Moscow left because of constant discrimination, threats, restriction on freedom and even brutalities. The laws of New York can be enforced, the perpetrators found guilty, public opinion aroused.

We are cognizant of our special blights and we are determined to eliminate them within the framework of democracy. We need no advice from one who, himself, is engaged in a government-approved policy of nationality discrimination.

to illustrate his talk. It was made as part of a television program that was taped for showing in the United States this fall.

The point Mr. Bernstein made was that Beethoven's music, and to a lesser degree that of other German masters, comes "closest of any of the widely held idea of a universal language," because of the German genius for "development (which) is the fountainhead of everything we call 'symphonic.'"

Mr. Bernstein dedicated his playing of the Beethoven Concerto to the goal of the "kind of rapport (that) can bring us peace, the immediate and necessary goal of the world." The dedication, he said, was with "special reverence," because of the Jewish Holy Day season. He pronounced, in Hebrew and then in English, the ancient benediction: "May the Lord lift up His face to you and give you peace."

There was a momentary silence, then a great wave of applause, as though the audience fully understood Mr. Bernstein's ending his talk on this note.

That night he and the orchestra, whose trip was made possible by a $150,000 donation by the Ford Motor Company, played to another large audience, says the New York Times. The program was Rossini's "Semiramis" Overture; the Beethoven Piano Concerto; and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

The following day I begged permission from the barracks Soviet to visit the neighboring town. I said I needed a day of relaxation before returning to work in the potato field. My request was readily granted. I watched the clerk of the Soviet as he made the entry into the book. He wrote: "Comrade Christopher Grantville is hereby given leave to visit town for purposes of relaxation in accordance with the rule that members of the academic professions, who as non-producers are more likely to succumb to the strains of the war of socialist liberation, should be granted exceptional leave privileges when conditions require them."

I walked to the town which was about five miles away. Along the road I was frequently greeted with the outstretched fist by groups of people working in the fields. I returned their greetings in the same manner. The name of the town had been Forkville and at the town limits there had been the usual sign, "You are now entering Forkville. Population 6,789. Protect our children." This sign had been freshly painted over and now bore the legend: "You are now entering Engelsville. Win the War Against Imperialist Aggression." I went directly to the town's public library. I found it locked. A crudely printed leaflet was tacked on the door. I did not stop to read it. I could guess what it said.

More than thirty years have passed. All traces of the past have been eradicated long ago. The country has been rebuilt and our United Socialist States of America is now again heavily industrialized. The Free Federal Republic of Russia has also recovered from the devastation of three decades ago. There still are no diplomatic relations between the two. The world remains divided though the fighting has ceased. The strange radiation clouds dissipated some years after the First Atomic War, and they are not mentioned in any of the war records.

I am now an old man in the seventies, the only one who miraculously escaped the radiation effects and who remembers events as they truly occurred. I am writing this record for a future generation. I do so not merely for the sake of objective truth, though as a historian I am naturally devoted to it. I am impelled by more important considerations.

The world has managed to rebuild its ruins without knowing the truth. But there has been talk lately that this country will soon again be in a position to make atomic weapons with which it will be possible to defeat Russia "and liberate the Russian workers and the oppressed colonies of Russian imperialism from the yoke of the Kremlin war-mongers." It is not improbable that we will soon be able to build atom bombs. Remembering the past, I am convinced that present-day Russia with its free institutions will at least keep abreast of us in this regard. And then?

I know that for the sake of humanity I should shout my knowledge from the roof tops, but I also know that were I to do so I would be looked up as a lunatic, if not condemned to a worse fate.
